By the death of Thomas Huxley, which took place on the 30th ult, English thought and letters are poorer than they were. Born at Ealing in 1825 HUXLEY was educated as a doctor and actually served at sea for some time as a naval surgeon. The charms of pure science soon drew him, as they drew HELMHOLTS, away from medicine, but not before his fine researches on the Oceanic Hydrozoa and his brilliant monographs on other comparative anatomy subjects had received due recognition by his election to the Royal Society at the early age of six and twenty. In the following year (1852) the Society bestowed its gold medial on the young Fellow, and from that date the life history of HUXLEY has been the history of English science. Primarily a comparative anatomist he yet made brilliant excursions into many fields of science and in nearly every case brought off the spolia opima. physiology, embryology, and morphology, he have tried to suppress known facts, to perdid rare original work, to say nothing of secute their searchers, and to deny them oated herse-power 3,500. writing text books which on their literary merits alone may be almost reckoned English classics. Although the recognized head and front of British science for more than a generati v. and although he has done as into vice, and then as the custodian of public much original research as almost any man of his time, it is chiefly as a man of letters that HUXLEY will live. Pen and ink will give him his stature in the eyes of posterity. Mr. R. Perrott Forshaw, who, it is stated, has been a resident in Japan for several years, is at present on a visit to England, charged, among other business, with the development of a scheme of considerable importance to British manufacturers. Mr. Forshaw has been in Manchester. and in the course of an interview with a representative of the Manchester Guardian he is dicated the lines on which it is proposed to carry out this new commercial scheme. There has for some time Government itself has shown an auxiety for the be attained, and now that the present scheme Doubtless the people of Tawi Tawi believe to has been formulated it has received the senction scheme, as described by Mr Forshaw, is one " for botter, inter-working between Japanese merobants and others and British manufacturers." and provides, with a variety of safeguards, for direct communication between the trader in Japan and the manufacturer here, all financial arrangements being amply recurred by the atrongest Japanese bank. At the present moment there are no foreign manufacturers represented, under the synction of the Government, in either l'okvo or Osaka: and it is in those towns that Mr. Forthaw anticipates the greatest usefulness for the proposed agency—in Tokyo as the centre of railway enterprise and of large companies of most descriptions, and in thaks as the control of the cotton industry of Japan. Naturally enough, are those which they believe will tend to develop the industries of their own country. Makers of machinery for all kinds of justile goods for railway construction, and for sanilary appliances would, for example, by likely to somand a good trade. The Japanese Government have impressed apon Mr. Forshaw the desirableness of letting it be known that the people of Japan are not very partial to great oint-stock companies but prefer in many cases. to carry on their industries on a comparatively small scale, as that the proprietor of a mill or workshop may be able to act as his own superout to furnish plant for cotton epinning mills on a small scale might profit anbatantially by the enterpriss. All those points however will no doubt be explained in detail by Mr. Forshaw before he returns to Japan in Bestember. He proposes to submit the seleme, in the form approved by the Japanes: Government, to the ifferent Chambers of commerce in England

Your correspondent has learned that there is same dissatisfaction at the Vicerov's vamen over he report, published a few days ago, that the French naval offluers who made a recent visit to his city were kept waiting three days before bey were granted an andience by His Excelency. The report came directly from a source that was supposed to be thoroughly reliable. It is but just, however, to say that those who had charge of the reception deny the accuration, and say that the andience was granted as soon as practicable and say that any delay that boourred was nuavoidable. It gives me great pleasure to make this correction, and your readers will doubtless be glad to know that the Viccros and other officials concerned made every effort to show their visitors the honour which was due them.—N.
